Cleo Thomas defeated Machine state Joe Williamson for the presidency by more than 500 votes in Thursday's election. He saw a record turnout of 4,906 to vote. The runoff total of 4,906 was larger than that of Monday's general election.

Thomas is the first non-Machine presidential candidate to be elected since Jim Zeigler was elected in 1970.

Describing himself as "very relieved and very excited" over his victory, Thomas said that he would have to be careful to be "not the first black president of the SGA but the president of the SGA and a representative of all students."

THOMAS SAID that two areas to be covered by his new administration from the start will include election reform and judicial reform. When asked if he believed that his victory at the polls would prove a 'killer blow' for the Machine, Thomas replied that he didn't believe it to be the end of the Machine but that sororities had gained new political confidence from the race.

Thomas commented on the "signs of more independent thinking of students, particularly those in sororities and in dorms. It's a signal that times are changing."

In a statement delivered to the press Thursday night, Williamson said, "I would like to thank my supporters for standing by me through this campaign. It has been a trying experience but one I have enjoyed immensely.

"I WOULD LIKE to offer my sincere congratulations to Cleo on his election to the SGA presidency. Cleo is a very capable person and I wish him success during his year at the top. No matter what has happened during the past two weeks, I do not regret running, it is an experience I shall always remember," said Williamson.

Election returns were:
For president: Cleo Thomas-2,099, Joe Williamson-2,182.
Arts and sciences senator: Jon Berganier-1,746, Harding Fendley-1,726.
Communication senator: David Davis-2,156, Marsha LeFebvre-1,126.
Graduate school senator: John LaGlow-2,086, Galen (Skip) Hughes-77, Bruce Lowrey-89.
Education senator: Jimmy Moore-292, Jim Young-274.
